Property to an Insane Man. Topeka, Kan., says: William J. Wood, jr., who is an inmate of an insane asylum here, has just been declared the rightful owner of the famous Emma gold mine at Aspen, Col., valued at $2,000,000. The decision was given by Judge Marshal in the circuit court at Denver. The mine for the past ten years has been Discovered on April 17, 1879, the Emma mine has caused nearly a dozen persons to commit suicide. It was in a large degree responsible for the downfall of Robert C. Schenck, who was charged with promoting its stock while minister to Great Brinot dispose of their ownership. In 1880 J. B. Wheeler & Co. of New York sent out a prospector, who accidentally came across the mine and found pay dift in large quantities. The firm immediately began a search for the original owners. Detectives discovered that Wood and his companions had been killed by Indians in New Mexico, that Mrs. Wood had died of grief in Montreal, Canada, and that six of the Wood children were in Kansas. Four sons were located in Sumner county, and Emma Wood, a daughter, was found in mine for $500 apiece, but Emma and Wil-liam refused to sell. This did not deter Wheeler & Co. from operating the mine, ed his skull, which caused him to lose his mind. The other boys died in poverty in Kansas, and the Wheeler company went on working the mine.

AMERICAN PUSH.

What the Thunderer Has to Say About That Soudan Bridge Contract.

From the London Times. A good deal of comment has been caused by the news that the contract for the bridge which is to carry the new Soudan railway ver the River Atbara has been given to an American firm and it seems to have been ssumed in some quarters that a trans-Atintic ironmaster had been preferred to a British manufacturer and that the Egyptian government had gone out of its way to igy the reverse. The English agent for the Egyptian government, who had the ordering of the Atbara bridge, gave the first chance o British traders and would doubtless have given them the sole chance, but for the im-importance and as the Americans could in no choice but to go to them for the work. In contrast to the promptitude with which they have shipped the component parts of the bridge may be placed the fact that the agents of the Egyptian government had to wait four months for one small bridge of thirty-one tons ordered in England. Probably the results of the results ably the recent engineering dispute was responsible for this. It will be found that the locomotives for the Soudan railway, or, at all events, the first batch delivered, will case is precisely the same. The desire is to get delivery with all possible dispatch

"It's a curious fact," remarked an old police official, "that when a criminal chooses an alias he nearly always selects one having his own initials. Whether this is merely instinctive or whether it is done to correspond with markings on linen, and so forth. I have never been able to determine. As a rule crooks display very little imagination in the coining of names. When one of them tells a cock-and-bull story to an officer and lugs in a few fictitious characters, the christening is not apt to extend beyond Smith, Jones and Brown, and that reminds me, by the way, of a very curious incident. Some years ago a young chap named Will Meyers murdered a farmer near Atlanta, and after an exciting chase was caught in Cincinnatt. He insisted, after arrest, that the crime had been committed by a man named Brown-Allen and when investigation showed the story to be palpably false a good deal of curiosity was expressed as to why he should have chosen that peculiar, hyphenated name. One day a detective was standing in a stairway which led to a room formerly occupied by which led to a room formerly occupied by the young murderer, and happening to glance across the street read the two names, 'Brown-Allen,' on a large gilt sign over a drug store. The inscription was really 'Brown & Allen,' but a telegraph pole obscured the '&.' That solved the mystery. No doubt Meyers had often stood at just that point almlessly studying the street, and unconsciously the sign became so firmly impressed on his brain that when he cast about, on the spur of the moment. he cast about, on the spur of the moment, for a name for the imaginary assassin, ne immediately thought of Brown-Allen. As he escaped from jail and is now at large he might tell us, if he desired, whether the theory is correct, but I am willing to bet

For Prince Bismarck's monument to be erected at Eisenach over a thousand de-signs were sent in by three hundred competitors. The committee picked out three designs from these as the best, and on opening the sealed envelopes containing the artists' names found that all three selected were by Herr Kreiss of Dresden.
